

Father Closes Shop To Begin Search For Lost Son; F.B.I. Told To Resume Hunt

Israel Grossfeld, of Ridgefield, Connecticut, closed his haberdashery shop on quaint Main Street indefinitely and began an anguished search for his son.

"If it takes all my life this is my No. 1 job — to find the boy, nothing else," Mr. Grossfeld said as he sat in his deserted store. Two months ago Mr. Grossfeld's nineteen-year-old son, Fred, an honor student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, writes William E. Farrell, in the New York Times, vanished from the campus after playing a late evening game of bridge.

Since then Mr. Grossfeld, aided by townspeople, has sent out thousands of notices with a picture of Fred, a serious boy of medium height, who wears dark-framed glasses and is a habitué of libraries.

So great is the boy's love of books that his father has persuaded The Library Journal, which is sent to librarians all over the country, to carry Fred's picture. Discounting foul play, "the only possibility is that something went wrong with his mind," Mr. Grossfeld said.

"But even if something was mentally wrong he'd still go to libraries — that's all he cared about was books," the gaunt father said. "I feel he is alive, so I'm going everywhere I can and see anybody who can be helpful."

He left his wife, Mina, who teaches Russian part-time in the high school, and his fifteen-year-old son, Morris, and went to Boston. There he will talk at length with Fred's classmates, M.I.T. officials, and the police and will comb the streets of Cambridge and Boston.

He plans to go to Washington to see Connecticut's Senators and Congressmen and then to New York to implore news media to use its facilities, says the New York Times, to send Fred's picture and description throughout the country.

In particular he will seek the aid of Jackie Gleason, the comedian, "because I've watched him for years and because he's a human being who has power." He said he hoped to get Mr. Gleason to publicize his plight on his Saturday night, nation-wide television program.

As he talked, often in a disjointed way, Mr. Grossfeld emptied two large manila envelopes on top of a table. They contained family photographs and Fred's old report cards, all "A's." There were also pictures of gaunt starved victims of concentration camps.

"I came here with my family in 1949 with eight dollars and started a new life," Mr. Grossfeld, one of the few survivors of a Nazi pogrom in Brody, Poland, said. "Everything was fine until now. My boy's missing — this has to be a story. I can't sit and wait and pray, that's not enough for me."

During the Christmas season residents of Ridgefield helped keep Mr. Grossfeld's store operating. They would even do it now, he said, "but I don't think it's the right thing to do."

"What I want is help in finding Fred," he declared. "I don't care if I have to close the store altogether."

FALL OF ISRAELI MINISTER OF JUSTICE HAS ROOTS DEEP IN PARTY POLITICS

A lingering dispute between Premier Levi Eshkol and his former Minister of Justice, Dov Joseph, has clouded the first months of the new Israeli Government. Dr. Joseph was banished by the party from its parliamentary delegation and then was eliminated from the Cabinet, reports James Feron, of the New York Times, from Jerusalem. The dispute centers not so much on what was done as on how it was done.

Dr. Joseph's stature in Israel and the loyalty he has engendered over the years among many of Mr. Eshkol's own associates has kept the argument in the public eye long after it would have been forgotten had another minister been involved.

The widespread interest in the case prompted the Premier to issue a statement to say that at no time during the formation of the present Government was Dr. Joseph given to understand that he would continue to serve in the Cabinet.

An indignant Dr. Joseph replied that Mr. Eshkol had never indicated to him that he would not be in the Cabinet and that other Mapai party ministers "close to Eshkol" also thought that he would be reappointed.

"But now it turns out that eight days before the Cabinet was established Eshkol had already offered the post to (Yakov) Shapiro," Dr. Joseph said. "This was at a time when I was sitting with Eshkol in his home helping him to form the coalition," he added.

"Throughout this period the Prime Minister never mustered the courage to say something when all it would have taken was a telephone call," Dr. Joseph said.

The same charge was leveled at Mr. Eshkol when he dropped Dr.

Joseph to the 118th place on the Mapai slate of 120 potential members of the Knesset (parliament). Dr. Joseph was then in the United States and learned of his banishment through the press.

Under Israel's proportional representation system, voters cast ballots for parties rather than candidates. The parties are allotted parliamentary seats in proportion to their share of the total vote, reports the New York Times. The Knesset members are taken from the parties' election lists, where priorities cannot be changed after their submission.

In the general election last November 2, Mr. Eshkol's Mapai party and its coalition ally, Ahdut Avoda, won 45 seats.

The purging of the former Justice Minister apparently has its roots deep in party politics. It has been traced also to a controversial libel law that Mr. Joseph introduced before the last election, a law made especially stringent for weeklies and regarded as responsible for the election of Uri Avneri, editor of the controversial weekly Haolam Hazeh.

Dr. Joseph first angered party leaders last year when he told the Cabinet that it should accept former Premier David Ben-Gurion's application for a legal investigation of the Lavon affair, a complicated party dispute over responsibility for a decade-old security mishap. The Cabinet angrily rejected the move and Mr. Ben-Gurion's followers left to help him form a rebel party.

Dr. Joseph stayed, however, and was not asked to resign. His punishment came later, according to his friends, when he was summarily dropped from the Parliamentary list.

The libel law dispute is believed to have cost Premier Eshkol and his political alignment some support in the November election and to have directed sympathy toward Mr. Avneri, the editor.

Dr. Joseph's colleagues say he was criticized later for the unpopular measure by party leaders who said they had read the draft of the law but who had not in fact read it. Their later frustration was taken out on Dr. Joseph, his friends say.

What troubles many Israelis is the abruptness of Dr. Joseph's dismissal and the appearance that it smacks of revenge. Described as a man of intellect and of independent means, says the New York Times, the 65-year-old barrister always managed to steer his own course while remaining a member of the Government.

Dr. Joseph's war service, says the London Times, serving first in the Royal Artillery and later at the War Office.

During his years at Hull, Powell taught almost every subject in the legal curriculum, and although this left him little leisure for research it made him an extremely able law teacher. In 1949 he was appointed to a readership in law at University College, London, and although no specific mention of it appeared in the terms of his appointment it was recognized that he would be responsible for the teaching of Roman law in succession to Professor Jolowitz, who had just been appointed to the Regius Chair at Oxford.

Powell entered upon this new task with enthusiasm and ability at an important moment in the growth of the College Law faculty. He was never simply a specialist and this was strikingly exemplified when in 1952 he published his "Law of Agency," of which a second edition appeared in 1961. This work at once won popularity both with teachers and students and emphasized the extent of his learning in this field of English law. In 1955 he was appointed to the Chair of Roman Law at the college. Even then he was able to give his English law colleagues valued assistance, more particularly in the establishment and conduct of seminars for the able Final students.

Powell also played his full part in the work both of the College and the University of London. He had served as Dean of the College Law Faculty and at the time of his illness in 1962 he was Dean of the University Law Faculty. He had also successively served as secretary and as chairman of the University Board of Studies in Law. In 1953 the University of Oxford conferred upon him the degree of D.C.L. and at the time of his re-

Professor Of Talmudic Law Tells Orthodox Leaders Not To Debate With Christians On Matters Of Faith

Orthodox Jewish leaders were told that they should not engage in theological debates or dialogues with Christians on any topics involving private matters of faith, says Emma Hughes, in the New York Herald Tribune, but that inter-religious dialogues on humanitarian problems were desirable.

The statement came from Rev. Dr. Joseph I. Soloveitchik, renowned theologian and professor of Talmudic law at Yeshiva University, in New York. He is also chairman of the Religious Law Committee of the Rabbinical Council of America which held its annual mid-winter conference in Lakewood, N. J.

His statement was read to the conference by its president, Rabbi Israel Miller, of New York City, and was heartily welcomed. Rabbi Miller said that great confusion and uncertainty have existed among Jewish leaders as to the extent to which they should become involved in the growing movement for interfaith dialogues and ecumenical relationships with other religious groups. This statement, he said, gave clear guidelines for this emergency.

Dr. Soloveitchik's statement said:

"We are opposed to every public debate, dialogue or symposium concerning the doctrinal, dogmatic or ritual aspects of our faith vis-à-vis similar aspects of another faith community. On the other hand, when we move from the private world of faith to the public world of humanitarian and cultural endeavors, communication among the various faith communities is desirable and even essential."

Jews are not to live in a "culturally closed society," Dr. Soloveitchik's statement continued:

"The Jewish religious tradition expresses itself in the fusion of universalism and singularity. On the one hand, Jews are vitally concerned with the problems affecting the common destiny of man. We consider ourselves members of the universal community charged with the responsibility of promoting progress in all fields — economic, social, scientific and ethical. As such we are opposed to a philosophy of isolationism or esotericism which would see Jews living in a culturally closed society."

"On the other hand, we are a distinctive faith community with a unique commitment of singular relationship to God and a specific way of life."

"In the areas of faith, religious law, doctrine and ritual, Jews have throughout the ages been a community guided exclusively by distinctive concerns, ideals and commitments. Our love of and dedication to God are personal and bespeak an intimate relationship which must not be debated with others whose relationship to God has been molded by different historical events and in different terms. Discussion will in no way enhance or hollow these emotions."

Four topics are listed as "improper" for public dialogue by Orthodox Jews: (1) Judaic monotheism and the Christian idea of the Trinity; (2) The Messianic idea in Judaism and Christianity; (3) The Jewish attitude on Jesus; (4) The concept of the Covenant in Judaism and Christianity.

Religious Unity Of Three Branches Of Judaism? Well, Maybe

Three Rabbis representing the Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform branches of Judaism voiced cautious agreement that religious unity of the three branches could be achieved. Their views, expressed on a personal rather than official level, were given at a symposium on Jewish religious unity, says the New York Times, sponsored by the quarterly journal, Judaism, published by the American Jewish Congress, at the organization's headquarters, 15 East 84th Street, New York.

A Reform leader, Prof. Jakob J. Petuchowski, of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, proposed that religious Jews unite in accepting three main principles: "Affirmation of the personal God; revelation of Torah by God to man; and the central role of the Oral Tradition."

The paper by Dr. Petuchowski was read by Prof. Eugene Borowitz of the college's branch in New York. Dr. Petuchowski, who is a member of the faculty of the main campus in Cincinnati, was unable to get there because of the weather.

Dr. Petuchowski said: "It would be foolish even to dream about religious unity so long as some of us set ourselves up as judges to measure our fellow Jews' Judaism to determine who is the better Jew."

He remarked that to combine the three wings of Judaism into one would "of necessity involve some give and take." In matters of personal piety, he said, "Let God alone be the judge."

Dr. Seymour Siegel, of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, a Conservative institution, agreed that Jewish religious unity demanded not only a consensus of basic principles, but also the right to differ on how these beliefs should be interpreted.

Dr. Siegel said that what held Jews together was "a series of commitments to certain concepts," and that what made "pluralism desirable and even necessary is freedom of interpretation." A basis for religious cooperation among Conservative, Orthodox, and Reform groups, he said, lies in "unity based on concept, and diversity based on interpretation of these concepts."

Dr. Irving Greenberg, of Yeshiva University, an Orthodox institution, welcomed what he described as a "thaw" in the positions of the three main branches, "which could lead to Jewish religious unity."

However, he warned that two immediate crises must be met: the role of Halacha (Jewish law) in determining the legitimacy of marriage and divorce; and a growing partnership among the three branches of religious Jewry, reports the New York Times. He urged leaders to "keep lines of communication open and resist the righteousness of institution."

Throughout this period the Prime Minister never mustered the courage to say something when all it would have taken was a telephone call," Dr. Joseph said.

The same charge was leveled at Mr. Eshkol when he dropped Dr.

Powell Was Prof. Of Roman Law At University Of London

Professor Raphael Powell, who was Professor of Roman Law at the University of London from 1955 until illness caused his retirement three years ago, died at his home in Hampstead at the age of sixty-one years. He and his widow, Catherine, whom he married in 1927 were distinguished members of the Jewish community and active in many spheres of Jewish social and educational welfare. He is survived by his widow, a son, and a daughter, says the London Times. Born at Bristol on August 4, 1904, he was educated at the Cathedral School, Hereford, and afterwards at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he was a Somerset Thornhill Scholar in classics and where the dominating influence in legal studies was at that time the late Dr. W. T. S. Stallibrass.

Powell obtained first class honours in 1925 and followed this with a very good second in the B.C.L. examination. He was senior Hulse Scholar in 1926; Harmsworth Law Scholar in 1927; and in 1929 he was awarded the Barstow Scholarship.

From the outset he had intended to follow the career of an academic teacher of law at a time when law schools were small and appointments few. For this reason following his call to the Bar by the Middle Temple in 1929 he entered the service of a firm of legal publishers for a short time.

In 1931 his ambition was partly realized by his appointment as assistant in law at University College, London, on a part-time basis, but his stay was short since before the end of the session he had been selected by Professor J. D. I. Hughes, of Leeds, to join his small but able team of law teachers in the faculty at Leeds of which Hughes was then and for many years afterwards Dean.

At a later period in his career Powell was accustomed to mention appreciatively the assistance and encouragement which he then received from that distinguished law teacher. In 1937 he left Leeds with some regret on his appointment as head of the still smaller Department of Law at Hull where he remained until 1949 with an inter-

Yale Editor Won Jacks Battle But Lost The War To Harvard Girl Editor; And She's A Lady And Can Cook

His clique cheered lustily as the hometown managing editor bounced the little red ball and gathered in all ten jacks successively on onesies, twosies, threesies, and foursies before missing on fivesies.

"Champion material," one spectator in the staid board room of the Yale Daily News said, reports the New York Times. He was speaking of John Rothchild, managing editor of 'The Yale Daily News,' who trounced his opponent, Miss Linda McVeigh, the first female managing editor of The Harvard Crimson.

The challenge to the jacks match had been issued by Mr. Rothchild in an attempt to "stem the tide of the feminine conspiracy to undermine manliness in the United States."

Clad in a tuxedo and sipping champagne, Mr. Rothchild crouched on the floor of the paneled board room and went on to snatch eight jacks at one time on eightsies, nine on ninesies and finally all ten on tensies.

He then dazzled the throng, including the eight-year-old referee, Polly Prelinger, with a swift "Eggs in the Basket," in which he scooped up the jacks with his right hand and transferred them to the left without letting the ball bounce more than once.

Miss McVeigh was definitely off her game. Although she had practiced for forty-five minutes in The Crimson's office with two twelve-year-olds she never got past fivesies and did not even attempt "eggs in the basket."

As balloons popped and the audience sang "Bulldog, Bulldog Bow Wow Wow," a formally attired aide read Mr. Rothchild's victory statement.

"I won the jacks match but my truthful admission is that I lost the war," he said. The statement paid tribute to Miss McVeigh's charm and culinary ability (she had fed him Vietnamese real the other night), as she sat with becoming modesty, occasionally brushing back her long blonde hair.

The opponents then kissed and Miss McVeigh said: "I'm quite willing to agree that John's better than I am at jacks." Then she added: "I saw him put together a paper at 5.30 the other morning and I'm better than he is at that."

Miss McVeigh, a junior at Radcliffe, said she would play Mr. Rothchild in a tennis match in the spring and attempt to obliterate "this temporary setback in my psyche."

She glanced around the room, which contained several newsmen and television cameras and noted with a touch of pride that The Harvard Crimson had not covered the match because it was not concerned with the foibles of its staff.

★Friends and associates of the late Moses A. Leavitt will establish a library in Israel in memory of the Joint Distribution Committee's longtime executive vice-chairman, who died last year at the age of 74 years. The library is to be an addition to the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. The project was announced by Louis Brodsky, JDC chairman. The library will cost $125,000, to be raised by contributions from Mr. Leavitt's friends and colleagues, both in the United States and overseas. Mr. Leavitt, generally recognized as one of America's leading authorities on overseas relief and emigration problems, died in Geneva, Switzerland, in June. At the time of his death he had been JDC executive vice-chairman for almost twenty years. The Baerwald School was chosen as the site of the memorial library because Mr. Leavitt was largely instrumental in the establishment of the school in 1958. The school was the first undergraduate school in Israel to give a degree in social work, and is now a major source of trained professional personnel for Israel's welfare agencies, Government departments, and communities. Contributions should be sent either to the United Jewish Appeal or direct to the JDC at 3 East 54th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022. Individuals outside of New York City will be invited to participate in cooperation with local federations and welfare funds.

DOCKET 9168 IS EXCITING READING.

Jet-swift, it shows how the decisions of a few men — made back in 1963/64 — are going to affect your flying convenience.

HERE IS THE PRINCIPAL EVIDENCE:

- Exhibit A. Your national airline already has SEVENTY-EIGHT aircraft in its all-turbine Air Canada fleet.
- Exhibit B. By mid-summer, 1968, TWO more DC-8 jettliners, plus SIX swift new twin-jet DC-9s will be added.
- Exhibit C. FOUR more DC-8 and another TWELVE DC-9 jets will join the Air Canada fleet between January and June of 1967.

SUMMARY: 24 NEW JETS IN 24 MONTHS

DECISION: An additional 9,168 seats a day will be available for jet travel within Canada! It took wise planning to forecast these future needs, starting back in 1963. The simple truth: good service always creates more customers, and Air Canada ordered these 24 aircraft to make sure that you will enjoy greater flying satisfaction than ever before — with 40% more seats to choose from. You'll see new schedules, new cities added to our Air Canada Canadian jet routes, new convenience in departure times: all in step with our new aircraft. See you aloft!

NOTICE ABOUT PICTURES

The Canadian Jewish Review is now considering photographs for the Festival Magazine issue for Passover, on April 1.

Preference is given to photographs posed before a plain, unfigured background; and all photographs must be straight, front-view; and finished studio pictures. Glossy proofs are required.

Do not accept dark pictures for reproduction in the sepia section of the Review from your photographer as they are not acceptable. Pictures, especially of children, must be light rather than dark and shadowed. Insist on this must.

Candid photographs can never be taken with the same care as photographs in a studio, with studio lighting. Ask your photographer to arrange for studio photographs, too, particularly for weddings and bar-mitzvahs!

FATHER CLOSES SHOP TO SEARCH FOR LOST SON

He said he felt that the police investigation of the case was not adequate. "With them it's just another boy missing - just routine," says the New York Times. The Cambridge police reported that there were no clues to the boy's whereabouts.

Since then Attorney General Nicholas DeB. Katzenbach ordered the Federal Bureau of Investigation to resume the search for Fred Grossfeld, the sophomore at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who vanished from the campus last November 30.

Mr. Katzenbach's order was a victory for the boy's father, who spent most of a week in Washington seeking the F.B.I.'s help in his own lonely quest to find his nineteen-year-old son.

Mr. Grossfeld enlisted the aid of Senators Thomas J. Dodd and Abraham A. Ribicoff, both of Connecticut, and Edward M. Kennedy, of Massachusetts. They were reported to have communicated with the Attorney General's office to ask Mr. Katzenbach to review personally the merits of the case.

The F.B.I. had taken part in the search shortly after Fred's disappearance, because Mr. Grossfeld had received a ransom call from a professional narcotics addict who demanded $3,000 for the student's return. Nothing came of that, however, and the F.B.I. agents were called off the search.

Fred is of medium height, has light-gray eyes, light brown wavy hair and wears dark-framed glasses, says the New York Times. He is an avid reader and spends a great deal of time in libraries.

FAIRY GODMOTHER TOUCH DEEP IN THE HEART OF TEXAS

Neiman-Marcus no longer has multimillionaire customers who buy whole show windows full of Balenciaga dresses, expensive furs and precious jewels to surprise their wives. But the 58-year-old specialty store, says the New York Times writer, Charlotte Cuttis, which has never been reluctant to scour the world for the rare and the exotic, is still very much in business.

When it isn't selling such Christmas-time specials as his and her airplanes ($175,000 and $149,000) or Chinese junks ($11,000), it falls back on such staples as hand-knitted and appliqued Italian après-ski sweaters with hoods ($250); cat's eye diamond necklaces ($110,000); and $1,500 bathrobes made of shaltooish, a fur the Ikey goats of the Himalayas rub off their necks and onto rocks only in the month of May.

"You sell a $200,000 necklace today and there's no excitement," Stanley Marcus, the store's benign president, said. "It isn't news. It's not a regular thing, but it's not unusual."

Since he joined his father's store in 1926, Mr. Marcus, who calls himself "the world's oldest fashion show commentator," has been preening about the importance of taste and quality in the matter of clothes. And the results are obvious.

"The new rich of Texas became better dressed and better housed faster than any other new rich in the country," he said.

They also seem to have lost their zest for the fancy purchases that made Neiman-Marcus not just internationally famous (the store, unlike most of its New York rivals, regularly sends its news releases to such cities as London, Paris, and Tokyo) but also a symbol of all that is exceptionally extravagant.

"We haven't had anybody like Jim West for a long time," Mr. Marcus said, almost wistfully. "He had two bodyguards and paid for everything in cash."

Mr. West once bought a four-foot-high Steuben glass decanter the store was using as a display piece. The Houstonian filled the glittering crystal with bourbon and gave it to his doctor as a present.

Neiman's, which has an estimated total of 200,000 active charge accounts — a handful of which are worth $100,000 a year — wouldn't go broke, says the New York Times, if it had to depend solely on Texas for its business. But it doesn't.

Oklahoma has an adequate supply of oilmen, one of whom recently bought his wife a pair of white mink cowboy chaps, and lots of the customers are Californians. It was a pair of New Yorkers, however, who asked the fur department to send some mink coats to Love Field, the Dallas airport, so they could shop between planes. The store sent 16 and made a sale in 30 minutes — before the New Yorkers and one new coat flew off.

"I'm easily satisfied by the best," Mr. Marcus said, quoting Oscar Wilde. "I believe in quality and service."

Mr. Marcus's father, the late Herbert Marcus Sr., founded the store in 1907 with his sister, Carrie Marcus Neiman, and his brother-in-law, Al Neiman. In 1928, Herbert bought out his brother-in-law's interest. And one by one, his sons — Stanley, Edward, Herbert Jr. and Lawrence — became associated with the business. Mrs. Herbert Marcus Sr., who is now 84 years old, is vice president in charge of horticulture.

"Without an office," she said, although she is often in the store.

Her job is to see to it that the thousands of green plants in the four stores — two in Dallas and one each in Fort Worth and Houston — look right and stay healthy.

The seven-story main store, which is recovering from a $10 million fire about a year ago, is famous locally for its Zodiac Room, which attracts important Dallas businessmen at lunchtime. It is run by Helen Corbett, whom Mr. Marcus refers to as "the Balenciage of food."

The menu lists such dishes as jellied avocado soup; red snapper poached in white wine with dill hollandaise; and the Fresh Flower Pot. The last is a baked Alaska served in a miniature flowerpot topped with two red roses. The pièce de résistance, however, is lemon velvet ice cream (flown in from California), says the New York Times, served in a brandy snifter with candied violets.

The fashion departments are equally impressive. Neiman-Marcus has all the major American designers aside from Norman Norell, who is quarreling with the store, and most of the French and Italian ones. It sells French originals, line-for-line copies, and imported ready-to-wear.

The Trophy Room, a sports-wear boutique that has been mistaken for a shop that sells moose heads and stuffed bears, prides itself on unlined silk pants for $60; flower-printed cashmere sweaters with matching cashmere stockings ($165); and the $250 après-ski sweaters.

It is conceivable that this season's après-skiers will carry three-fifths of

WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS PLENARY DELEGATES TO SEE CAMP DEDICATED TO BELGIAN NAZI VICTIMS

By Monty Jacobs, of the W.J.C. New York Office

If there is a gale blowing, the creaking and groaning of Fort Breendonck's barrack doors carry down the Antwerp-Brussels highway, and the wind, gusting in terrifying fashion, whips around the gallows and the firing posts where Nazi victims died. But this summer, if it is still and sunny and quiet at Breendonck, the echo of that grim era in the history of Belgium and European Jewry will be heard fifteen or sixteen miles away in Brussels. There, in the Belgian capital, the leaders of world Jewry, coming from forty or fifty lands for the Fifth Plenary Assembly of the World Jewish Congress, will pay tribute to the millions massacred in Europe's madness.

Fort Breendonck was notorious. Into this barbed wire compound thousands of persons, political opponents of Nazism, Belgian resistance fighters, Jews and others were brutally thrust, some to hang, some to drop under dreadful volleys. Malines was another notorious point, mainly because it was lignor; a dice cup; a jigger; and a pack of playing cards in a velvet-lined valise case ($35); listen to an exclusive record that describes the joys of knowing good wines ($4.95); or go bounding around their various chalets and lodges aboard a mechanical horse that actually gallops ($150). But not many will be able to brew their tea in the late Dorothy Doughy's hand-painted pot, says the New York Times. There is only one like it, and it costs $25,000.

Orthodox Leader Says Humane Society Seeks Control Over Ritual Slaughter Of Animals

A major humane society was charged with seeking "virtual control over Shechita (Jewish ritual slaughter)," in a radio address by Rabbi Morris Shter, executive vice-president of Agudath Israel of America. The Orthodox leader charged that the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the sponsor of several bills in the New York State Legislature requiring the use of a holding pen to prepare animals for Shechita, "could have a monopolistic stranglehold on Shechita because it refuses to relinquish to public domain its exclusive patent on the only available pen."

Rabbi Shter's radio address, which sought to mobilize public opinion behind the opposition of many Orthodox Jewish groups to the humane slaughter bills, declared that the "exclusive monopoly which the ASPCA enjoys over the holding pen it seeks to make mandatory by law, would result in a situation whereby the humane society could put a complete halt to the practice of Shechita by withdrawing its patent from use." "Such a control over Shechita should not be granted to any single group, the transit trap into which 25,000 or 26,000 Jews were herded before deportation to the death camps.

Breendonck and Malines figured prominently in the infamous operation the Nazis put into effect when they streamed into Belgium in May of 1940. At that time Belgian Jewry totalled about 90,000, of whom about one third were refugees from Germany and Austria. The sudden German thrust, engulfing Belgium, brought consternation to Belgian Jewry and set thousands on the move in search of sanctuary. Some reached safety in Switzerland, many others found only temporary respite in France.

Belgium had earlier displayed its concern for Hitler's victims by admitting almost 35,000 refugees. Most of them were accommodated in Brussels and Antwerp where, in a swift attempt to strike roots, they established factories and businesses. Near Brussels a special center was established for the initiation of the refugees into the Belgian way of life, and much of the furniture and equipment came from the Belgian Government.

In mid-1939 Belgium had earlier demonstrated its humanitarianism, when a shipload of 900 hapless refugees, barred from Cuba on technical grounds, was shuttled back to Europe. Jointly with Britain, France, and Holland, the Belgian authorities agreed to give a home to the weary refugees.

When Germany overran Belgium a year later, Queen Mother Elizabeth and some of the country's leading citizens demanded that the Jews be left unharmed. The German military leaders agreed but the Gestapo disregarded any such undertaking and began an assault on the Jews that resulted in thousands going to their death through Fort Breendonck and Dossin Barrack at Malines.

Thousands of Belgian Jews managed to escape; hundreds were hidden and guarded at incredible risk by dedicated Belgian friends and neighbors. But the flow in and out of Breendonck, in and out of Malines, took a dreadful toll and only about 25,000 Jews remained to bliss the liberation of Belgium at the end of the war.

The grisly events at Malines are recorded by a plaque erected by the Jewish community of Brussels; but, so that all the venom and destruction of the Nazi period shall never be forgotten, Belgium has decreed that Breendonck shall remain intact, ghastly memento of murder, to which the delegates of the World Jewish Congress Plenary Assembly, re-dedicating themselves to the task of safeguarding Jewry and its rights, will come to pay their homage.
